To what extent did Stalin transform Soviet society and culture by 1941? (25 marks)

To a large extent Stalin transformed Soviet society and culture by 1941. This transformation was a by-product of Stalin's attempt to economically fast-forward Russia into modernity. Social and cultural transformation held mostly a negative impact on the lives of civilians in the USSR. Thus, to a large extent

How successful was Stalin in transforming Russia politically and economically? (25 marks)

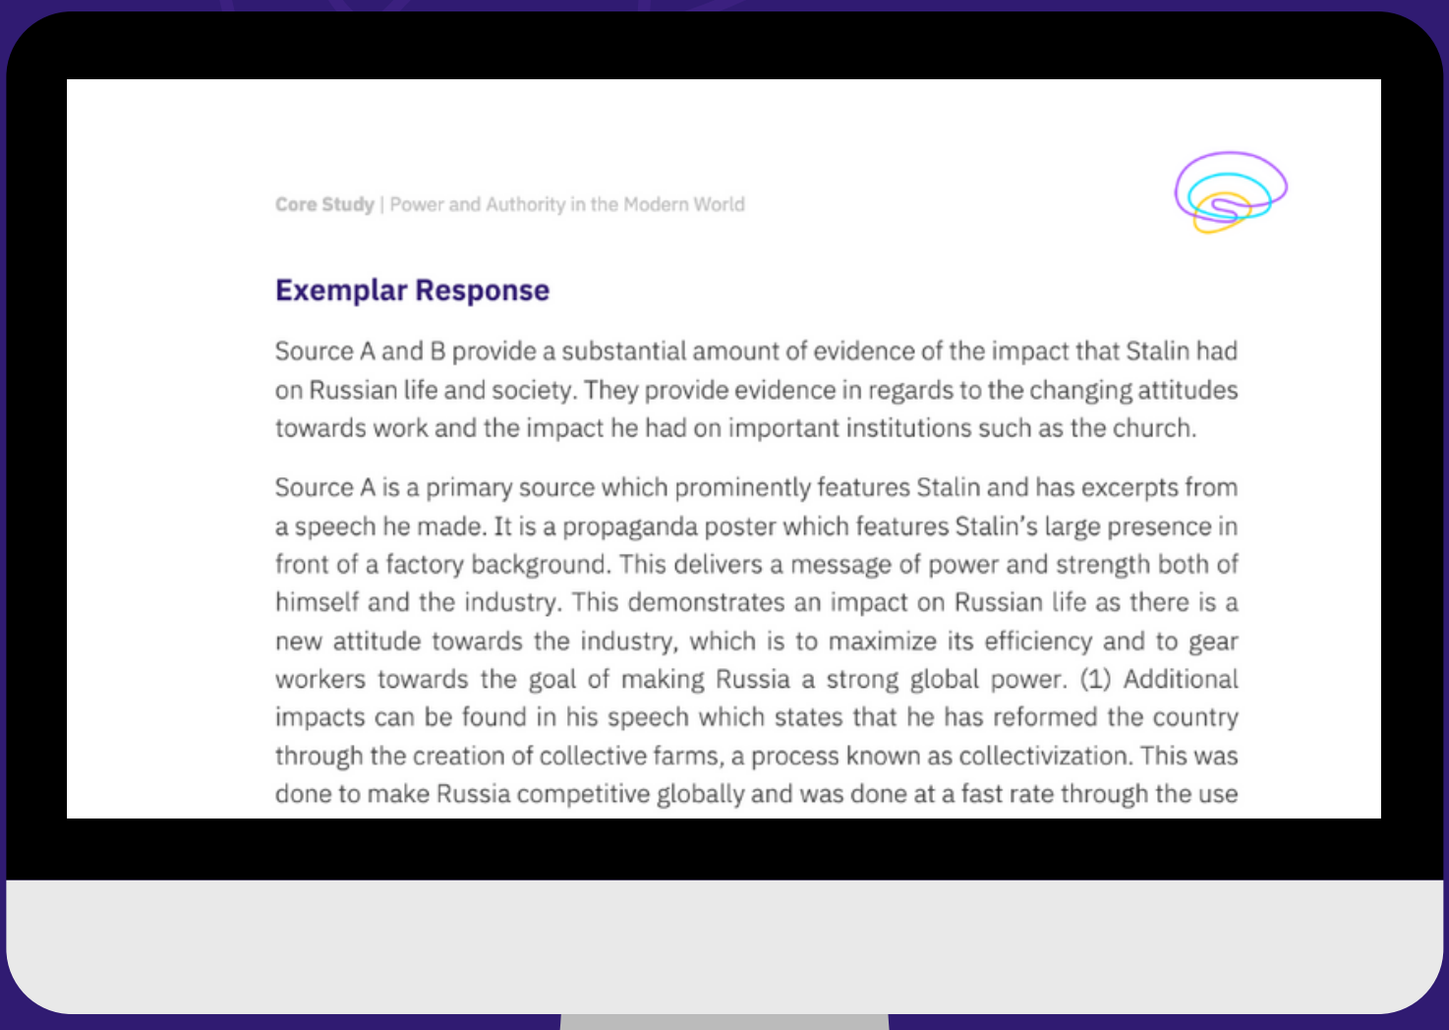

Stalin succeeded in transforming the USSR politically and economically to a great extent. Using fear, rewards, and coercion, Stalin successfully transformed Russia politically from a Communist Party into a totalitarian regime. He effectively transformed Russia using political cunning, and an apparatus of coercion. Stalin's success in transforming Russia politically is seen in the growth of the Community Party and in the way, he obtains and maintains his position as a totalitarian dictator from 1925-41. Because of this political transformation, Stalin was very successful in transforming Russia economically from an agrarian state into an industrial powerhouse. To what extent did the Geneva Peace Agreement contribute to conflict in Indochina? (25 marks)
This question was asked in the 2017 Modern History Exam. As this section is the survey it is less likely (not impossible!) that a question will be asked about this content. Therefore this is good content to know as background and to incorporate into essays to add depth when necessary (such as when discussing the strong Nationalism of the Vietnamese people, that is using this information to give evidence for this idea).
However, in this question, it is important to give a short summary of the First Indochina War which led to the agreement followed by an explanation of the Peace Agreement and then an analysis of its impact. You will need to integrate information from other

Practice Question
Compare the impact of apartheid on white and black communities.
(4 marks)
Exemplar Response
White communities prospered under apartheid due to the booming economy and formed large Afrikaner corporations under this. Indeed, the whites had small pockets of poverty in urban and rural areas but was mostly constituted of skilled labour while black maids and gardeners, in contrast, lived in poverty despite the economic boom. The blacks also lacked wage increases and were paid approximately 10% of white wages and were only able to unionise in the 1970s. Furthermore, black communities were divided into Bantustans or 'homelands' in 1950 which had poor facilities,
